A Lot of Heads Are Lost Over La Face Patrick Ortlieb of Austria won the downhill championship Sunday as the Winter Olympics got fully under way in Albertville, France.

Franck Piccard of France finished .05 seconds slower to get the silver medal and cheers from the hometown crowd. But Leonhard Stock, the 1980 Olympic downhill champion, missed a turn, hit a gate and crashed into a retaining wall. Marc Girardelli, the four-time World Cup champion, skied off the course at the same spot after posting one of the fastest early times. Paul Accola of Switzerland, the overall World Cup leader, whacked a gate at that turn while Franz Heinzer, the reigning world downhill champion, finished but was nearly skiing sideways on one jump.

Algerians Declare State of Emergency

By Youssef M. Ibrahim New York Times Service

PARIS - The government of Algeria on Sunday imposed a yearlong state of emergency under which virtually all constitutional rights can be suspended.

Algerians close to the military authorities said the objective of the government, which took power Jan. 11 from President Chadli Bendjedid, was to wage a "relent-less war" on the Islamic Salvation Front, the main opposition party in this nation of 26 million.

The fundamentalists won a victory in first-round parliamentary elections held in December, which then were canceled. The authorities have initiated moves to dissolve the Islamic Salvation Front, the Interior Ministry announced shortly after the state of emergency was imposed, Agence France Presse reported from Algiers. The ministry said the authorities had decided "to begin the procedure which would lead to the suspension and dissolution of the Islamic Salvation Front," in accordance with legislation regulating political parties.

The state of emergency, which allows the detention of citizens by the army and the the imposition of curiews and press censorship, had been widely expected since the military-backed government canceled free elections and replaced Mr. Bendjedid with a five-member State Council.

Under the declaration, the defense minister, General Khaled Nezzar, and the interior minister, General Larbi Belkheir, hold most of the executive authority in the government. They consult closely with the army's chief of staff and senior army, air force and navy commanders, as well as the state security police forces, or gendar-

Algerians said Sunday that the announcement was another confirmation that the January change of government was really a disguised coup that the civilian administranon of Prime Minister Sid Ahmed Ghozali tried to portray as a constinational change.

The move followed bloody riots in nearly 20 Algerian cities, from Constantine in the East to Oran in the West, on Friday and Saturday. Algiers itself was the scene of major disorders with entire neighborhoods placed under the control of security forces.

The clashes between fundamentalists and the police appeared to diminish Sunday, but various Algerian authorities said they resulted in at least 50 dead and 200 injured. More than 1,000 adherents of the Islamic Front have been arrested. Farlier on Sunday, the authori-

MOSCOW — Thousands of Russians gathered near the Kremlin on Sunday to protest President Boris N. Yeltsin's free-market changes, while thousands more assembled in a counterdemonstration urging Russians to give Mr. Yeltsin's policies time to succeed.

Many anti-Yeltsin demonstrators were pro-Com-

During his recent trips to Western Europe and North America, Mr. Yeltsin warned that Russia could return to Soviet-style totalitarianism if the West failed to support his free-market changes now.

He has acknowledged that ending state subsidies for food and moving rapidly toward capitalism will cause at least eight months of suffering, while his chief eccentric advisor, Yegor T. Gaidar, said recently that it would be two years before Russians saw "light at the end of the tunnel.

The anti-Yeltsin demonstration Sunday, which drew perhaps 20,000 people, gave no evidence that a mass uprising was in the offing. Organizers of the protest had predicted a turnout of 70,000.

But many protesters predicted that in a month or two, when the food supplies in people's pantries are depleted, there would be a "social explosion," as Viktor Sergeev, 40, an economist, said at the demonstration Sunday.

Mr. Kocherenko said he supported a wife, who is a student, and a 2-year-old son on his monthly salary of 700 rubles, less than $7 at current exchange rates. A 3-

U.S. Officials Take Tough New Line On Europe

They See Rising Friction Over NATO and Trade As Isolationism Grows

> By Marc Fisher Washington Post Service

MUNICH - American politicians, diplomats and academics warned their European counterparts on Sunday that a rising tide of isolationism was dramatically changing U.S. attitudes toward Europe.

Republicans and Democrats alike told European leaders that America's new domestic focus was leading to a much tougher U.S. drive for free trade, far fewer American soldiers in Europe, and even a wavering commitment to the foundation of postwar foreign relations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Speaking at the annual Munich Conference on Security Policy, Senator William S. Cohen, Republican of Maine, said that the "prevailing view" in the United States was that NATO was "no longer necessary, relevant or affordable."

He predicted that the alliance would become "mainly European organization."

Mr. Chhen said there was little support in the U.S. Congress for the Bush administration plan to keep 150,000 American troops in Europe. less than half the Cold War troop level. A more likely figure would be 75,000, he said. Senator Warren B. Rudman, Republican of

Mr. Wörner, a former West German defense minister, said that if the trade issue was not resolved, "we risk a profound crisis in the trans-Atlantic alliance

But Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek of the Netherlands called the American warnings "exaggerated" and said that a U.S. withdrawal from Europe could have the same kind of dire consequences it had after World War I. 'It does not work to say we better agree on GATT or else America will leave NATO," the Dutch official said. "That's not how friends talk to each other." Americans and Europeans often seemed to be speaking from opposite sides of a widening gulf. Several Europeans said they considered the U.S. comments on trade and security to be largely an election-year bluff.

"It's true that they've heard threats of American withdrawal for 40 years," said Senator John S. McCain 3d, Republican of Arkansas. "But this is different. Times have changed.

Perhaps with that in mind. German leaders said that Europe needed to move ahead on developing its own defense capabilities.

Loss of Special Election Is Another Blow to Miyazawa's Party

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches TORYO - Lefust opposition parties joined forces Sunday to defeat the governing party of Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa in a closely watched special parliamentary election. The defeat dealt a heavy blow to Mr. Miyazawa's government, which has been undermined by scandal. The victory by Yukihisa Yo-shida, who ran for the seat in the topper house of parliament on an anti-corruption ticket, was seen as an endorsement of demands by opposition leaders that leading politicians testify in parliament about "My victory is a clear sign of the people's anger against this." With 64 percent of the vote counted, Mr. Yoshida had won 156,595 votes, or about 58 percent, election officials said, making his victory certain. The opposition victory could signal "an early fall of the Miyazawa administration, even before the general election in July, because the contest is regarded as an indication

Mr. Miyazawa To back demands that Mr. Miyazawa's aides and others connected to the scandals testify, opposition parties have boycotted hearings since Wednesday.

The boycon could jeopardize enactment of the annual state budget, which must clear the lower house by the end of February. Some commentators have said failure to meet the deadline could threaten Mr. Miyazawa's hold on office. The election defeat added impe-

They were calling for as many as 18 people to testify in parliament.

The Kyowa scandal focused on Fumio Abe, former treasurer of Mr. Miyazawa's faction of the Liberal Democratic Party. He was arrested in January and charged last week for taking 80 million yen ($640,000) in bribes from Kyowa, a now-bankrupt property developer.

Bush Told Congress in Fall of Covert Plans to Oust Saddam

By Patrick E. Tyler New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President George Bush notified Congress last fall that the administration was undertaking increased covert actions in Iraq intended to foment a coup against President Saddam Hussain and support it with U.S. military forces if necessary. administration officials say.

The officials were responding to published reports that a new presidential finding related to efforts to oust the Iraqi leader had gone to congressional intelligence oversight committees. The finding a formal statement of the national security justification for the covert activities, is required before the Central Intelligence Agency can tap funds designated for such activities. The document was signed by the president before planning and contacts began in late November, these officials said.

Reports of the presidential finding came as the director of central intelligence, Robert M. Gates, was undertaking an unpublicized mission to the Middle East to consult with King Fahd of Sandi Arabia and President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt about the political, military and covert steps the Bush administration is taking to bring about Mr. Saddam's downfall, administration officials said.

The officials who discussed the finding said that they were doing so to clarify any mistaken impression from news accounts that presidential anthorization had followed, not preceded as required by law, the covert activities and military contingency planning that began late last year.

Mr. Bush on Friday would not discuss covert planning with reporters, and said: "Don't believe everything you read in the newspapers."

Referring to Mr. Saddam, he said: "I'd like to see him out of there. I'll just leave it right there."

[Iraq accused Mr. Bush on Sunday of suffering from an "obsession" about the country, Agence France-

Presse reported from Baghdad. [Instead of interfering in Iraq's internal affairs, the Information Ministry said, Mr. Bush should stick to "selling cars and spare parts to Japan." The statement also called Mr. Bush "history's third murderer, after Nero and Hulagu." Hulagn, Genghis Khan's grandson, destroyed Baghdad in the 13th century.]

Since last summer, U.S. diplomats and CIA officers in Amman, Jordan, and other exit points from Iraq have found that an increasing number of influential Iraqis traveling in and out of the country are willing to provide intelligence about discontent in the country, especially among Mr. Saddam's core group of sup-porters in the military and ruling Arab Ba'ath Socialist Party, as well as in important families in his hometown, Tikrit, CIA officials learned that a gun bartle had crupted in November between the security forces of two of Mr. Saddam's closest relatives. At the time, Mr. Saddam had removed one of the relatives, Hussein Kamal Hassan, from his post as defense minister, and replaced him with another relative, Ali Hassan Majid, who had governed Iraqi occupation forces in Kuwait.

The presidential finding anthorizing covert work was necessary for CIA officers to switch from their roles as intelligence collectors to active organizers working with dissidents in the Iraqi power structure,

The document discussed increased funding for propaganda broadcasts into Iraq with the assistance of Sandi Arabia, whose leadership has been pressing Washington to undertake a large-scale covert program. The goal would be to divide the Iraqi military by oxilding a network of opposition forces that could challenge Mr. Saddam's control of the countryside and ultimately challenge his stronghold in Baghdad.

Officials familiar with the anti-Saddam program said they believe that Saudi Arabia and Kuwait had agreed to cooperate both in financing a covert venture and in providing logistical support for whatever mili-tary or paramilitary operations might evolve.

Last month, Saudi officials invited Kurdish leaders from northern Iraq for talks about broadening the base of opposition against Mr. Saddam. Sandi intelligence officials have looked into the possibility of working with Turkey to provide anti-tank and antihelicopter weapons to Kurdish guerrillas who could be trusted not to turn these weapons against Turkish forces. Syrian intelligence is also said to be cooperating with Saudi Arabia in the anti-Saddam efforts.

In Washington, the presidential document provided the legal authority for the White House on Nov. 21 to instruct General Colin L. Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to prepare a detailed report on how the United States could respond to any coup that could unfold in Iraq and that could benefit from United States military intervention.

In his report, General Powell argued that the United States could support a coup by Iraqi military units if the Iraqi commanders asked for air support and other help in advance. But General Powell said such an effort would require sending a large number of U.S. air and ground combat forces back to the region to insure success.

As it is, about 25,000 U.S. troops remain in the region, most of them aboard 25 warships or maintaining the more than 200 United States combat aircraft

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Secretary of State James A. Baker 3d departed Sunday for a tour of Central Asia and Russia that will focus on trying to forge an opening to remote, new-ly independent former Soviet republics, to curb nuclear prolifera-tion and to lock in deeper cuts in atomic weapons. In Germany on Monday, Mr. Baker intends to witness the launching of the U.S. military airlift of food and humanitarian assistance to the former republics. He will also make his first visits to the Central Asian states of Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Tajikistan, which are being courted by Iran and Turkey.

Although the United States has recognized their independence, none of the three has established formal relations with Washington. But officials in Washington said that some of the countries were eager to sign agreements with Mr. Baker for formal ties.

Many analysts see a power vacuum in these former republics, and Mr. Baker hopes to demonstrate that the United States has not neglected the Muslim populations of the former Soviet Union. In addition, officials said, Mr.

Baker was trying to arrange a visit to Armenia and Azerbaijan, which have been locked in a bitter dispute over the mountainous territory of Nagomo-Karabakh. Mr. Baker also plans to tour k, the once-closed 510 rian city that was a center of Soviet nuclear warhead operations and the site of a nuclear waste explosion in 1957. The visit is part of an effort to show concern about nuclear proliferation and arms control after the breakup of the union. In Moscow, Mr. Baker and top U.S. arms control specialists have scheduled meetings with President Boris N. Yeltsin and other Russian officials to clarify the proposals Mr. Yeltsin and President George Rush have made for further reduc#### tions in strategic nuclear weapons. .. The Challenges of Aid

Francis X. Clines of The New York Times reported from Moscow: After the first five truckloads of 40 tons of donated German butter vanished without a trace into the Russian maw, administrators of the European Community's emergency food aid program knew that wariness was at least as important as charity in trying to help this tough and hungry land.

"The butter trucks just disappeared," said Elisabeth Apraxine, a Belgian who is one of the visiting Community executives administer ing a program to put $280 million worth of basic foods into the markets of Moscow and St. Petersburg.

Monitoring has become the watchword of this EC program, which has now installed three separate private companies with scores of inspectors to track the European charity from truck to warehouse to special EC retail counters in the two cities to keep it from seeping into the black market. The American program is to begin Monday with the arrival of the first 12 of 54 flights carrying a total of more than 2,000 tons of surplus bulk food and medical aid. The new airlift is dwarfed by the European Community's winter program but may get more attention because of its airlift intimations of deliverance by the Cold War superfoe. The U.S. program will spread its aid in a tight time frame as a morale booster across at least a dozen former Soviet republics. : The European program is seven times as large, with 144,000 tons being delivered in three months of truck convoys.

The American Dream: Voters Are Asking, Darkly, Where It Went

In the Homestretch New York Times Service of the great American dream. In New Hampshire, Tsongas Is Surging

> By David S. Broder Washington Past Service

PORTSMOUTH, New Hampshire — To the amazement of everyone but himself, former Senator Paul E. Tsongas of Massachusetts has moved ioto a possible winning position in the New Hampshire Democratic presidential primary.

As the Feb. 18 voting nears, Mr. Tsongas is reaping the reward for following the classic New Hampshire victory formula: Organize early and get hot at the end.

By deciding in April to challenge President George Bush and campaigning here constantly from his home in Lowell, just across the border, Mr. Tsongas gained months of organizing head-start on the others in the Democratic field others in the Democratic field.

And last week he got hot, riding a wave of landstory newspaper and television pieces and finding ever-larger crowds, while the erstwhile favorite, Governor Bill Cinnon of Arkansas, fought off a fin bug and a round of news stories questioning his Vietnam War

Mr. Tsongas's surge could turn into a skid before the ballots are cast a week from Tuesday. Opponents who have treated him with deference are beginning to question his electability in November and his activities as a business lobbyist in the seven years since he left the

He is no match for Mr. Clinton as a speaker and his television commercials have been less memorable than those of Senators Tom Harkin of Iowa and Bob Kerrey of Nebraska.

Voters still have time to question the plausibility of sending out another Greek-American from Massachusetts against Mr. Bush's campaign team, which demolished Michael S. Dukakis in 1988. And Mr. Tsongas himself predicted Thursday that he would face a new round of questions about the status of his health six years after successfully completing a radical course of treatment for life-threatening cancer.

But a Tsongas strategist said Saturday that private polls todicate such a marked shift in his direction that "the others don't matter." "If he does what he has to do next week," he said, "he can take over this race."

Normally dour, Mr. Tsongas is relishing what Mr. Bush used to call "big mo," or momentum, that has propelled him well beyond the reach of the others and made him a serious threat to upset Mr.

When candidates get hot in New Hampshire, their message suddenly attracts support from voters who have little in common with each other but read into the candidate the qualities they crave in a president. That is what is happening to Mr. Tsongas now.

Mr. Williams is far from alone in his concern. As American voters prepare to make choices over the next nine days to the first caucuses and primaries of the 1992 presidential campaign - the Iowa caucuses are Monday, and the New Hampshire primary is Feb. 18 — they are confused, angry and depressed about the state of the nation.

In dozens of interviews conducted during a 1,500mile (2,400-kilometer) journey across the country to this heartland city, pessimism emerged as the dominant mood within the electorate.

The nation's plnat workers, homemakers, miners, students, farmers and businesspeople are searching for ways to turn the economy around and bend government to their will, some with what comes across as now-or-never determination. But they seem to find bule substance to the offerings of the presidential candidates, Republican and Democratic.

Many speak of being forced to choose between the lesser of two political evils, and they give no real indication which they will choose.

"George Bush is to trouble, but when you take a look at that Democratic field, you know the Democrats have got troubles, too," said Carolyn Hannah, a waitress in Collinsville, Illinois. "That adds up to a country in trouble. It's depressing."

For people like Ms. Hannah, what may he the worst

Like many Americans, she considers affordable health care one of the most serious economic problems facing the nation.

"Something's got to be done, or there's going to be the devil to pay." Ms. Hannah said. "We've got to find some way to make this country work and to get it back to work.

In a nation that was founded on hope and optimism indeed, became a global symbol of hope and optimism, hardly anyone now boasts about America victorious, and there is eynical, empty laughter when politicians talk about "morning in America" and "shining cities" and "points of bight."

"This is your 'shining city," Art Bensley, a Baltimore steelworker, said as he drove about the crumbling ruins of plants and factories that had been closed to recent years as the nation's industrial base has steadily declined. "Our grandfathers and our fathers - they all worked to these mills," he said. "They build America down here to a sense. Now it's all turning to rust. They say that next they're going to shut my mill."

In the distance, hard by another closed mill, a ship was unloading foreign-made cars.

"I don't blame the Japanese or the Germans for working hard and shipping their cars over here," Mr. Bensley said. "What I want to know is how and why we got to the point that we don't make so many of our own cars. Whose fault is this? Don't we need some new policies? Isn't it time we stopped this?" Mostly, Americans have more questions than answers these days. But Jack Guy, 42, a high school teacher in Columbus, Ohio, thinks he knows what has caused much of the trouble. "We've gotten ourselves toto the fix we're in because e've started living like our government," he said. "We spend too much, run up debt, drag out paying our bills, have too many luxuries. So one answer is to tighten up, get lean and mean. Let's face it. We've got to scale back — not on our dreams, but on how we go

Little Drama in Noriega Trial

Instead of the tales of high-level international intrigue that his lawyers had long hinted would be the backbone of their case, they are drawing more on the police blotter than secrets of state.

For four months, prosecutors pounded away at the idea that Mr. Noriega's trial was "just another drug case" and that the former general who ruled Panama during the

In an effort to knock down those arguments, Frank Rubino and Jon May, Mr. Noriega's lawyers, have been forced to turn to the very same people who put their client in jail, scheduling at least a dozen agents of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration as defense

Gone from their case is a line of defense, which the lawyers had indicated they would advance, involving the Nicaraguan rebels, or contras. In court conversations with the judge and prosecutors, Mr. Rubino and Mr. May had said that Colombian drug dealers had flown co-caine into the United States and used some of the same planes or pilots to fiv arms back to Central America for the U.S.-backed con-

Mr. Noriega and his U.S. allies, the lawyers said, knew about the efforts to arm the contras but not about the drug smuggling.

Mr. May's opening statement on last week focused on his client's years of assistance to U.S. law-enforcement efforts, and to the first four days of testimony, there was no mention of Nicaragua, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Israeli totelligence agency Mossad, Cuba's Directorate of Security or any military iotelligence operation.

You won't hear anything about Nicaragua," Mr. May told reporters at a daily briefing made possible by U.S. District Court Judge William M. Hoeveler's easing of an order barring lawyers from talking Mr. May said the defense's openiog statement was "a very accurate road map" to the arguments the defense will present

"What you see," he said, "is what YOU'VE BOL' What the defense has in its hands apparently does not include many of the documents it regards as essential to mounting a defense based on the guns-and-drugs theory or other secret intelligence operations. Ever since Mr. Noriega's capture after the U.S. tovasion of Panama in December 1989, his lawyers have complained that their efforts to obtain such documents and advance such arguments have been blocked on national security grounds or dismissed as irrelevant.

When asked if he and Mr. Rubino felt boxed in, Mr. May smiled and replied, "It would not be appropriate for me to comment."

The liabilities of the defense's substitute strategy became apparent as soon as Mr. May called his first witness, Peter B. Bensinger, who was head of the Drug Enforcement Administration in the Ford and Carter administrations.

· When asked about three letters he sent to Mr. Noriega and Senator Bob Dole, Republican of Kansas, lauding Panamanian cooperation with the war against drugs, Mr. Bensinger repeatedly minimized their importance. Mr. Bensinger said he had al-ways regarded Mr. Noriega "with suspicion."

"I based that on the files I had seen, anecdotal information, even the size of his bouse," he said.

Mr. Bensinger, who had visited
Mr. Noriega's house on a trip to Panama, said the Panamanian military cooperated with the drug agency on some specific drug arrests. But when drug deals were made, he said, "I was not under the impression this was an organization that was not under suspicion of corruption or looking the other way."

Although the defense argues that

Mr. Noriega was the drug agency's most important ally in Latin America, much of the early testimony focused on his assistance in small drug cases.

That allowed the prosecutor, Michael P. Sullivan, to suggest in the cross-examination of one federal drug agent, who had been stationed to Panama, that many of the cases mentioned by the defense involved "small-time traffickers." The witness immediately endorsed the de-

Get Help to Somalia

country. A senseless clan war waged by teenagers with automatic weapons has made a killing ground of the once sleepy capital of Mogadishu. Hundreds of thousands of Somalis are roaming the countryside with little food or medicine. The result is what the U.S. State Department calls "the most acute humanitarian tragedy in the world today."

Worse, it is far from clear what the world can do. Relief efforts are imperiled by un-friendly fire. Somali warlords have ignored a United Nations call for a cease-fire. An arms embargo imposed by the Security Council means little, since belligerents can tap stockpiles of high-powered weapons, And Soma-ia's neighbors lack the will and means to resolve the conflict. For its part, Washington is reluctant in an election year to become embroiled in what could be a costly quagmire. Yet it is morally and politically un-thinkable to stand aside as Somalia verges on national suicide. If its civil war is home-grown, the weaponry is not. For decades, Somalia was a Cold War pawn, aided by the Soviet Union and then after 1978 by the United States and other Western powers, China and Libya. Tanks, artillery and rocket launchers flowed into an impoverished country. As The New York Times has reported, this huge arsenal has fallen into the hands of warring factions.

Having contributed to this calamity, So-

A disaster almost beyond imagining has overwhelmed Somalia, now a ghost of a cy sit on their hands. The civil war began a year ago after the ooster of President Mohammed Siad Barre, Somalia's strongman for 21 years. Northern Somalia declared itsell a separate republic as a chaotic power struggle crupted among two major clans and a multitude of subclans.

The urgent need is to stop the fighting and open safe corridors for relief agencies. The United Nations' new secretary-general, Bu-tros Butros Ghali of Egypt, faces his first test in Somalia, a country he knows well. But if he is to take necessary risks, he will need the solid backing of the Security Council and most especially the United States.

Somali leaders are to meet in New York for cease-fire talks this week. If the war 2005 on, the United Nations faces the hard question of whether or how to intervene.

At the least, a limited UN military presence to assure access for relief supplies may be in order. In Kurdish areas of northern Iraq, UN guards have already shown their value. And not-yet-independent Entrea has offered to contribute battle-tested troops to an international force. No doubt these are ad hoc improvisations, but then Somalia pre-sens an unconventional challenge to President George Bush's vision of a new world order. If the United Nations fails to deal resourcefully with Somalia's calamity, chaos and famine will certainly spread.

Walesa Makes a Point

Poland's historic transition to a market economy is going remarkably well in purely economic terms, but the strain on its weary and anxious people is enormous. That strain is reflected in Lech Walesa's bitter speech to the Council of Europe, where he reproached the rich and complacent West for encouraging Poland into this venture and then providing little help when the going got rough. His words ought to remind Western govern-ments of their heavy stakes in Polish success.

The Polish transition, now in its third year, is currently the most important economic experiment in the world. Poland is not only the largest of the East European countries, but because of its many similarities it is also the closest precedent for the further experiments now beginning in Russia and Ukraine.

Polish ambivalence about this experiment runs deep. President Walesa chided the West for a shortfall in investment, but even the present investment - mainly from Germany — is stirring fears that the country is being sold off to foreigners. Everyone is delighted to see the Communist regime's police and security apparatus dismantled, but one consequence is a surge of financial scandals and violent street crimes. Shops are full and lines at the counter have vanished. but prices are very high and a lot of Poles are scraping to survive. There is (under-standably) a rising resentment of the torrent of advice from know-it-all Westerners. It would be a mistake to describe the present swing in political attitudes as reactionary, because Poles know that they have nowhere to return to — least of all the Communist failure. But they also know that so far the transition has brought many of them lower living standards than ever and much uncertainty. There seems to be an increasing majority against the single-minded pursuit of economic efficiency and a growing insistence on balancing capitalist freedom with social protection like that in Western Europe. The dilemma is that Poland cannot yet afford much in the way of social benefits. Poles are now in the process of sorting out their Ideas about these conflicting values.

It is probably true that, in the economics of the transition, the worst is over for Poland and the standard of living there is improving. But President Walesa's outburst at Strasbourg last Tuesday is an indicator of the cost at which this progress is being won. The West has the most compelling reasons to want to see Poland stay on its course. The right response to Mr. Walesa is to return to all the questions about Western support for Poland and to ask once again whether it is the right kind of help - and whether there is enough of it.

Middle-Class Queen

For starters, she is Britain's richest resident. Yet she pays no taxes. Her coffers, even in a that money rolling in allows her to keep a world-class stable, half a dozen castles and a yacht, the Britannia, with fake fireplaces.

Being royal, she carries no money: her ladies in waiting settle up later. No one sits in her presence unless she gives the O.K., and no one speaks to her unless she initiates the conversation. As first in the realm, she signs documents at the top of the page rather than at the bottom.

Yet, when asked, most of her subjects find her comfortably British, a lot, in fact, like themselves. Her clothes undoubtedly cost a bundle, yet anyone can easily match her wardrobe at Marks & Spencer. Her favorite

Queen Elizabeth is no ordinary mortal. head covering, even in her Rolls, seems to be a babushka, and she makes no secret of the fact that, next to horses, her favorite pastime refers to her mother as "Mum."

Even her troubles are reassuringly middleclass. The more George Bush tries to be one of the common folk, the more clitist he seems. But the queen's problems with her sister, her kids and even Margaret Thatcher all tend to put her subjects at national ease. Last week, as she celebrated the 40th year of her reign, the biggest grump against her was her continuing refusal to pay taxes. It would be nice, no doubt, to have some of ber riches in the national treasury. But even ber stiff-arming of the tax men has a nice touch of middle class.

Seeing Through the Sand

These are great days for archaeology, with dramatic finds changing the conventional wisdom on everything from the Mayans' downfall to the Pyramids' building, and satellites taking infrared photos that tell you where to dig. That last technological wrinkle is brand new. Its first significant payoff was the announcement last week that a team of ingenious amateurs had located Ubar, one of the great lost cities of antiquity, buried in the sands of the Arabian desert in Oman. However new the method, its result fits in neatly with one of archaeology's long-standing traditions: the role of nonarchaeologists in many of the field's major breakthroughs.

Professional archaeologists had made several sweeps of the desert — the so-called Empty Quarter - without locating Ubar's remains, and before that several of the great romantic explorers, including Lawrence of Arabia, had failed in the same attempt. But none had at his disposal the cameras of the space shuttle Challenger, which took the photos in 1984 before its tragic destruction. A lawyer and a documentary filmmaker, both from California, had got interested in the travelers' tales about lost Ubar, which figures in the "Thousand and One Nights" and also in the Koran. They heard about the shuttle's infrared capabilities and pulled together a team to ask that the Empty Quarter be photographed. (Initially, of course, they were dismissed as cranks.) And they found, after computer enhancement of the pictures, that the cameras could "see" the densely packed sand tracks of ancient caravan trails. The trails linked trading centers in the desert with Mesopotamia, Rome and Jerusalem, and since Ubar was famed as a world center of the frankincense trade, they offer considerable grist for historical fancy.

Following the trails, which are invisible to the earthbound eye, the explorers came upon the remains of an octagonal fort with towers, the pottery fragments of millennia worth of human habitation and, most astonishing, the fact that the city was built over a limestone basin that subsequently collapsed. This could explain the other part of the Ubar legend, the city's fabled "sinking" into the sands, recounted in Arabian tradition as a sort of parallel to Sodom and Gomorrah.

As befits a good piece of amateur archae-ology, the find could also overturn some of the profession's longtime assumptions about the region: in this case, that civilization started there much later than in Mesopotamia to the north. Artifacts along the route suggest a history reaching as far back as 2800 B.C. an extra millennium. The professionals so far have expressed guarded interest, and none dismisses ont of hand the possibility that the space cameras and romantie explorers are on to something. It would make a nice legacy for Challenger, too.

States Can Break Up, Democracies Can Grow Up

WASHINGTON — Most Ameri-Can experts on international af-tal a remain incurably pessionistic about the prospects for a more decent and peaceful world. Many assert that the new post-Communist world will be one of intolerant, aggressive nation-alism rather than spreading democra-cy. They suggest that Croatia, with its bombed out churches and mutilated corpses, will be the model for much of what was the Communist world. This scenario may indeed come to pass. But if we look carefully, what is striking is not the strength of intolerant nationalism but its weakness.

Of about 3,200 people who have died in ethnic violence in the former Soviet Union in recent years, virtually all have come from non-European regions, most in the enclave of Nagorno-Karabakh in Azerbaijan and the Fer-gana valley in Uzbekistan. In Ukraine and Russia, nationalism has taken an extraordinarily moderate form.

Ukraine's leadership has not based citizenship on language or ethnicity. The defense minister is half-Russian and speaks no Ukrainian. In the Ukrainian referendum in December that led to independence, a large majority of ethnic Russians voted for independence, In Crimea, a majority of Russians favored separation.

All this suggests that the issue for most people was not mindless nationalism but a desire to get away from the old, hated Communist center -in other words, political freedom as mother words, pointed freedom as much as ethnicity.

Historically, Russian nationalism has always had a xenophobic side and today there are Russians who see a vast lewish-Masonic conspiracy to de-stroy their country. Russian nationalism has also been imperialistic. In the words of the 19th century poet Fyodor Tyutchev, the Russians had a right to rule "from the Elbe to China."

Yet when given a choice the Russian people did not vote for the purveyors of wounded national pride or for the neo-fascists of Pamyat but for Boris Yeltsin, who in effect advocated retreat to a "small Russia."

Despite threats about "border adjustments" and squabbles over the Black Sea fleet, Russia's leaders have peacefully disengaged from the for-mer Soviet Union. There have been any number of nationalist conflicts that so far have failed to materialize in the former Soviet bloc. Hungary is ripe for revanchism, giv-supporting the old order.

Unspeakable atrocities have been committed in Yugoslavia, but even the Serbians' aggression has faltered because a large number of young Serbs have resisted the draft or deserted.

Moreover, the danger that nationalist conflict poses to the world is far smaller than in 1914, when a Serbian nationalist started World War I by assassinating the Austrian crown prince in Sarajevo. The large comtries of Europe are no longer locked in competition for military hegemony. Far from seeing Yngoslavia's civil war was as an opportunity to fish in troubled waters, they have considered it a potential quagmine.

The bleak picture so often painted of the former Soviet bloc comes from a basic misunderstanding of nationalism. While nationalism is frequently the enemy of democracy, it has also been its handmaiden, ever since the French Revolution. Nationalism is often a crucial means of empowering ism in the new Eurasia. Both will coexist, often within the same country, and many states will walk a fine line between assertions of legitimate national identity and intolerance.

The consolidation of a bberal form is likely to remain authoritarian.

With the end of the Cold War, Americans need to rethink deep-seated pessimism about the chances for democracy in the former Communist world. Pessimists like Henry Kissinger who have appropriated the label realist" argue that the collapse of communism does not make the world any more secure because intolerant nationalism will grow up in its place. This leads to a kind of fatalism about nascent democracy and a policy prescription that looks to balance-ofpower politics alone to ensure security.

But while democracy may fail in many parts of Eurasia, Americans cannot make the opposite assumption that the entire region is an "area of darkness" in which liberal values do not have a chance.

States has an enormous stake in its ment in this part of the world.

In Africa, Left Behind And Angry

By Jim Hoagland

WASHINGTON — The images flickering across the television screen a few nights ago were horrifying enough. Viewers saw children murdering each other with automatic rifles in the ruins of the once handsome Somali capital of Mogadishu. But the remarkable free-lance footage of the largedy unreported civil war that of the largely unreported civil war that is destroying Somalia told a far broader story than the immediate human suffering displayed on the screen.

The African youths riding in jeeps mounted with recoilless rifles and grenade launchers did not often fire at each other. They were not attempting to take and hold buildings or to protect turf. They were shooting the buildings. They were smashing offices and apartments into shards and rubble, laughing gleefully as they did.

They were systematically destroying the Western-style city that European colonialists had erected on the rocky shoreline of the Horn of Africa, That city had been taken over and embel-lished by a generation of Westernized Somali politicians and businessmen after independence in 1960.

The scenes are emblematic of a physical rejection of the West and its artifacts that is taking place in many places in the Third World. Like a desperately ill body that casts off a transplanted organ, Africa is rejecting the cities the colonialists founded.

First the colonialists were pushed out as Africa and Asia gained indopendence. Then the Potemkin-village democracies that the departing powers had put in place were subverted by one-party states or military dictatorships of left or right. The honorable exceptions, such as Botswana and Zimbabwe, prove that the rule has been one man, one vote, one time.

The scenes from Somalia, while not conclusive, suggest a threshold being crossed. Will the razing of Westernstyle urban centers be part of a ghastly final solution" to the long interlocking marches of colonization and decolonization across this century?

The continuum is often missed Journalists and policymakers deal with each case as it comes. IGERIA:

The collapse of Kinshasa and Zaire's other urban centers as Mobutu Sese Seko's corrupt rule comes apart; Daniel arap Mo's betrayal of the Westernized Kenyan elite that helped make Nairobi a success story for so long; the frittering away of Nigeria's enormous economic potential — all are the subjects of journalistic snapshots or policy papers that focus on maneuvering Mr. Mobutu or Mr. Moi or someone else into the "right" response to the immediate crisis. What is usually lost is the role that the day's events play in a continuing Western retreat, part voluntary, part forced, from key parts of the Third World. Missing the bigger picture, Westerners are unable to develop the global perspective that could help stem the ebbing tide of Western involvement in much of Africa and Asia.

It is not a uniform retreat. Latin America, which shows signs of undergoing strong economic revival, is not part of the retreat. Neither are the developing countries of Asia that are booming because of Western invest ment or trade - although many are now increasingly dependent on Japa-nese investment and trade. But big chunks of the Third World have become a no-man's-land for Western interests in the last 20 years.

Western influence that was once strong or dominant in Indochina Iran, Afghanistan, Sudan or elsewhere: has been snuffed out like a flickering candle caught in a windstorm. Ameri can and European investors and trad-ers who could have been the bridge between poverty and economic sufficiency for African countries have pulled their resources back home.

The shortcomings and excesses of Third World governments justified that pullback in many cases. But to treat each case as a separate and irremediable problem, as many in the West are inclined to do, ignores the role that colonialism played in beloing inspire the chaos that grips many excolonies. More importantly, such tun-nel vision prevents the development of effective policies and programs by Europe and America that could create constructive involvement between the West and the Third World.

That is why it is important to understand that film of Mogadishu that ABC showed on Jan. 29 in its broadest context. The youths left behind in a decaying former colonial capital were not shooting at each other, or even really at those buildings. They were shooting at you, and at me. They were striking out at a Western world that they cannot see, or reach, for leaving them to their fate.

Egypt Doesn't Want Libya Attacked order amounts to hitting weak oppo-

CAIRO — The most acute con-cern in the Egyptian govern-ment today is not what outsiders might expect: not the Algerian crisis over Islamic fundamentalism, not the dragging Arab-Israeli peace process. It is the possibility of a military at-tack by the Umted States on Libya. That is the agitated subject that comes up in conversation with officials. The government is worried alarmed" is not too strong a word about such an American strike. During the last months the United States has been turning up the pressure on Libya to deliver up two intelligence agents suspected of planting the bomb that destroyed Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. Britain and France joined in the demand. The UN Security Council approved a resolution supporting it. A resolution to impose sanctions on Lings is expected to follow.

if Labya sall railed to turn over the two men, an American attack would have a procedent. President Ronald Reagan, accusing Libya of terrorism, ordered a bombing raid in 1986 that seems to have been an unsuccessful attempt to kill the Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi. But why should that so worry the Egyptians? They are hardly admirers of Colonel Gadhafi, and over the years there has been plenty of tension between Egypt and Libya. The answer is that President Hosni Mubarak has devoted much effort lately to turning Colonel Gadhafi to a more moderate path - persuading

groups like the IRA. And Mr. Mubarak's efforts have been effective. The Gadhafi government has moderated its rhetoric and its pattern of troublemaking. A striking example was its low posture during the Gulf War. More recently Colonel Gadhafi has criticized the Islamic fundamentalist regime in Sudan, which Western experts say is now harboring terrorist organizations that used to operate from Libya and Lebanon. To Cairo, which keeps a wary eye on its own fundamentalists. Sudan is a far more menacing neighbor now than Libya. Given that background, an American attack on Libya would be extremely embarrassing to Mr. Mubarak. It would say to Egyptians, and to other Arabs, that he had been unable to restrain the Americans desnite his 10 years of the closest relations with the United States. It would be the more awkward because of the crucial role Mr. Mubarak played in marshaling the coalition against Saddam Hussein, Without commitment of Egyptian forces to the war, the whole idea of a broad coalition including significant Arab states might have come apart. Moreover, the view here is that an American attack on Libya would give a tremendous boost to the Islamic fundamentalist movement across the Arab world. It would confirm the suspicion in many Arab minds that nents, especially Arabs.

President George Bush's new world

One Egyptian said: "If they do it, it will vindicate Saddam Hussein. It would be an assertion of American dominance on the cheap. America has the sheer power to do what it wants but it cannot prevent the result of furthering Islamic radicalization."

Cairo has tried to head off military commission on the Lockerbic disaster. It would include American and Scottish prosecutors. But the United States rejected the idea. Egyptian lawyers point out, as do international lawyers in the West, that there is no basis in international law for the demand that Libya turn over citizens suspected of crimes to another country. The anthonity for such a demand must rest on an extradition the ty, and Libya has none with the United States or Britain. The feeling here is that an American attack would so embarrass and expose Mr. Muharak that he would be forced to distance himself from the United States. The Egyptian press bas been printing increasingly forceful warnings against military ac-tion. One story quoted Mr. Mubarak as saying that he had already intervened to prevent a military strike.

Are the Egyptians unnecessarily concerned? Is there really a possibility of military action? In an American election year, with a president in trouble domestically, it cannot be excluded.

monetary and political treaties in Maastricht, Netherlands, Prime Minister Jacques Santer of Luxembourg, which held the EC presidency during much of the negotiations, talked to Joseph Fitchett of the International Herald Tribune about what happens next in the Community.

Q. Is closer European integration popular enough for the Maastricht treaties to be ratified easily?

A. People want a change to the role of the EC, but the prospect frightens them. In all our countries, there is a conservative reflex that inclines people to think about preserving what they've got and to worry about possibly giving up something that they might regret losing later. International uncertainties add to people's confusion, and there is also an element of passiviry among Europeans after the 40 years of peace known as the Cold War.

But history shows that countries only survive by developing into larger entities, and political leaders need to work harder at conveying this vision. Some countries will have debates about particular aspects of the Maastricht terms, but the package will not be contested.

Take Denmark: Ten years ago opinion there was divided about EC membership, but now Danes want more EC. For all of us, there is no alternative: If Luxembourg or another country didn't like the treaties, what could it dowithdraw from the EC?

Q. Do you detect waning entbusiasm to Germany about

A. The Deutsche mark is a reserve currency, so its status is sensitive throughout the EC, most of all in Germany.

As the European Community finalized landmark

That's why the Bundesbank is right to insist that nothing we are starting to enlarge the Community as we must to should threaten the strong D-mark: It's in our collective help stabilize Europe, but it must not make the EC toterest. By hiking German toterest rates right after the Maastricht summit, the Bundesbank made that point bluntly — and also sent a reassuring signal to German opinion, which is disconcerted by how much unification is costing.

EC Quandary: Conveying the Spirit of Maastricht

surmounted, probably in three to five years, with growth probably around 10 percent this year and 12 percent next year. The politicians simply have to provide leadership. have to remind people that no European country - not even Germany — can solve the challenges of security, technology and environment by itself.

Q. What happens next in the process of EC integration? A. At Maastricht, we decided to build an evolutionary drive into the process because the quickening pace of change is putting new demands on the EC. The Common Market existed unchanged during the stable conditions from 1958 to 1985, then we had to start working out the changes for 1992, and now we have decided that a further set of changes, probably as important as those at Maas-tricht, are needed by 1996. These will mainly affect the ungovernable. Q. So which countries will be included and which excluded?

A. Countries are going to arrive in waves. There should not be any problem about incorporating Austria and other countries to the European Free Trade Association. Eventually, we will have to consider Hungary and Czechoslovakia and, perhaps with slightly less certainty. Poland: It's inconceivable for a new Europe not to include countries whose history and cultures are so intertwined with ours. The Baltic states, I think, should initially seek to form an economic union on the Benefitx model. The Commonwealth of Independent States? Well, I just saw several of their leaders and we'll have a better idea, after their meeting later this week, about whether these countries, particularly Ukraine, are going to stick together. These are states that need close cooperative ties with the EC.

The real challenge for us is, not to spread EC membership, but to recognize that we must make real sacrifices to help these people. The EC has never shared with outsiders, but I hope that in a couple of years, once we're beyond the current electoral periods to some EC countries, stronger leaders and youthful idealism can put across this message.

Q. What about EC membership for the ex-Yugoslav

A. Slovenia presents no major difficulty, but Croatia. although European in character like Czechoslovakia and Hungary, can only come much later. Serbia has no claim, especially since it will not be considered the successor state of Yugoslavia.

European Bonds Stressed By Mark-Dollar Tension

By Carl Gewirtz memozional Herald Tribine

ARIS - Expectations of imminent further reductions in U.S. interest rates are sending the dollar and dollar bond markets in divergent directions. The currency sagged and bond prices rose late last week when Washington report ed an unexpectedly large increase in January's number of jobless workers. But European bond markets, which had moved up during the early-year U.S. rally, have failed to join the fete as the weakening dollar and dimming prospects for a rapid reduction in German rates threaten to increase currency tensions. Although weakened, ending trading at 1.558 Deutsche marks, the dollar managed to remain above 1.55 DM — a critical level that is widely considered to be constraints. same that the dollar can rise. The dollar's sharp loss of two-and-a-half pfennig from its high point on Friday appeared to take account of a coming cut in rates, but there is no way to be sure about that until the Fed

A quarter-point cut in the cost of overnight money from the Fed's current target of 4 percent is not likely to significantly perturb the currency market, John Lipsky of Salomon Brothers Inc. said. "But," he added, "it would be adventurous to say that the dollar has hit bottom and likely to go up from here."

That is not least because Mr. Lipsky does not rule out the possibility that when the Fed moves it could shave the rate by half a percentage point rather than the quarter-point cut now widely expected. The fact that the Fed did not move last week, Mr. Lipsky said, was consistent with its strategy of not wanting to be seen linking policy moves to specific data. The timing may further be delayed by the Treasury's quarterly refunding this week, when it will tap the market for $36 billion. Simon Crane, a trading adviser to banks, said he expected that waning optimism about an impending U.S. economic recovery would lead to a weaker dollar. "It's likely to break and fall to 1.50

DM. I tend to think it will set new lows, but that depends on what happens when the dollar is down at around 1.50 DM," he adds. Mr. Lipsky also said he saw the dollar headed below 1.55 DM. UT OTHERS cautioned that many investors are prepared to start loading up on the currency at around current levels in anticipation of a revival later this year that could carry it to 1.80 DM or higher.

Jim O'Neill of Swiss Bank Corp. said it was "dangerous to get too negative about the short-term outlook for the dollar because of the dreadful economic data coming out of Germany. He noted that December's industrial production fell 3.1 percent and manufacturing orders were off 2.5 percent. "The real story is that the German economy is slowing in a big way," he said, adding that this meant "we could see an easing of German monetary policy by late spring."

But Jonathan Wilmot at Credit Suisse First Boston cautioned about reading too much into the German data because it essentially only covers what is happening in Western Germany. Thus, he forecast the economy would perform better than West Ger-

And with the Bundesbank's thundering that the 6.4 percent y faise worl by steekworkers has to be floor for other unions, Mr. Wilmot said he believed that "clearly, there will be a delay in the pace of the expected decline in German interest rates. Adding a further chill to European bond markets is the prospect of an ever-firmer Deutsche mark. The mark's interestrate advantage over the dollar — already a hefty 5.5 percentage points—could widen as dollar rates fall. A stronger mark implies renewed tensions within the European fixed-band exchange-rate system that could oblige Germany's partners to raise their interest rates in order to keep up with the mark.

There are other problems as well. Britain, Italy and France all face important elections in coming months and international investors appear to be heading for the safer, smaller European markets such as Sweden and Spain where rates are high, more than 10 percent, and the currencies seem well protected.

As a result, new-issue activity in the Eurobond market last week was subdued. The most active sector was the Deutsche mark. Of the five new issues launched, the biggest success was the high-coupon offering from the Development Bank of South Africa, carrying the government's guarantee.

Its six-year issue, initially targeted at 150 million DM, was

Watanabe Urges Rice Concession

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches TOKYO — Foreign Minister Michio Watanabe on Sunday urged Japan to begin negotiations on replacing its ban on rice imports with tariffs as n means of moving the stalled GATT trade talks toward a conclusion, oews reports said.

Japan Broadcasting Corp.

quoted him as saying Japan had not submitted conditions for accepting tariffs, even though Arthur Dunkel, director-geograf of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, has urged each oasion to submit proposed tariff rates for farm imports by March t.

Mr. Dunkel has urged that all import bans he replaced by tariffs, which would be gradually reduced. "Other Uruguay round member oations are struggling for a settlement uoder certaio cooditions but Japan has been absolutely opposed to it," Mr. Watanabe said in a speech in Tochigi prefecture. "This will make Japan isolated." "Now is the time that we must concede to some extent," he said. A conclusion of the trade talks, known as the Uruguay round, has been delayed for more than a year by a dispute between the European Community and other agricultural exporting nations over subsidies. Opposition by Japan and South Korea to opening their rice markets has become an important subissue.

Japan has insisted in the past that it needs to ban rice imports to maintain self-sufficiency in its staple food because its farmers cannot compete with more efficient growers in other countries. (AP, AFP)

Developing States Compete Hard for Western Favor

By Tom Redburn International Herald Inbune

DAVOS, Switzerland - Poor Nawaz Sharif. The prime minister of Pakistan, a country only recently at the forefront of the Cold War battleground, attracted barely a ripple of attention from the hundreds of businessmen and journalists attending the annual World Economic Forum here. Meanwhile, people like Leonid M. Kravchuk, the new president of the brand-new nation of Ukraine, and Anatoli A. Sobchak, mayor of St. Petersburg, found their pockets bulging with busi-ness cards and requests for interviews by the time the week-long gathering ended last Thursday.

In fact, there were so many oew countries represented at this year's bigger-than-ever annual gathering of business leaders, government officials and prominent specialists that a lot of the old ones felt awfully left out. One thing was clear: the competi-tion for Western investment. Western aid, indeed, even Western attention, is growing more intense.

"It has turned into a big beauty contest," said Horsi Siebert, president of the Kiel Institute of World Economics. "Practically every developing country in the world now wants to open itself to Western investment, so they are all lining up to display their wares."

The new nations that once were buried inside the Soviet Union stood in the strongest spotlight. Lithuania, Azerbaijan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and others sent their previously all-but-unknown presidents to the meeting, pleading for Western business to give them a try,

Coming from South Africa, the African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela vowed to Western leaders that his group, which has led the struggle to end apartheid and turn over power to the longsuffering black majority, does not intend to impose heavy-handed state control of the economy.

President Frederik W. de Klerk, meanwhile, pleaded with business captains to return soon to South Africa as economic sanctions imposed by the United Nations are lifted. "Trust us. Invest in be said. "We have no choice but to succeed." Not to be outdone, some of the old-timers went to extra effort. For example, President Carlos Andres Perez of Venezuela, after being forced to return to Caracas to help put down a coup by mid-level army officials, made sure to place a phone call back to Davos to assure Western business that his country's economic program would continue.

Even Vietnam, long ostracized by the United States, joined the pilgrimage. "It is necessary to attend this kind of neeting to make ourselves better known." Phan Van Khai, Vietnam's first deputy prime minister, said in an interview.

To integrate outselves into the world economy. we have adopted a policy of open doors," he added. What we are trying to do is create the best possible conditions for foreign investment."

Slovenia, struggling to escape the ravages of the civil war among the various republics that once made up Yugoslavia, promoted itself with a slick pamphlet proclaiming: "A new state on the sunny side of the Alps."

Deal-making easily took precedence over most of the high-flown public sessions, which were conducted by such eminent but well-worn former officials as Paul A. Volcker, Henry A. Kissinger, and Karl Otto Pohl.

"Most of the talk in public is just for show," said Bill Bradley, the Democratic senator from New Jersey. "But the business atmosphere is frenetic. All the real action is behind the scenes."

Perhaps recognizing they could not compete with the newcomers, some of the pioneers at parading their economic advantages before the inter-national business community were oot quite as active as in the past.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari of Mexico, for example, stayed home. But the Mexican delegation, headed by the trade and industry secretary, Jaime Serra Puche, pur out a glossy brocbure, conducted dozens of briefings and produced an attractive art show.

Typically, the Russians stood out primarily for failing to put up a united front. They quarreled among themselves over whether President Boris N. Yeltsin's radical program of shock treatment for ty review documents relevant to the silicone implants might out have been to plants might oot have been submitted. Dow Corning is to release up to 100 documents relating to its research and marketing of the silicone gel devices. Dow Corning is a joint venture of Dow Chemical Co. and Corning Inc. Dow Corning Co. is making its documents public after the Food and Drug Administration clude Bioplasty Inc., Mentor Corp. and McGhan Medical.

Between a million and 2 million American women have had the devices surgically implantsaid that there were troubling safety questions about the silicone implants possible links to problems they blame on silicone gel leaking the development of auto-immune disorders similar to arthritis.

Without naming any manufacturer, Dr.

Kessler said the FDA had discovered that safeing the implants were "greasy," possibly due to silicone leaks, and comparing them to "the Pinto gas tank." Ford Motor Co.'s Pinto model became symbol of corporate oegligence in the 1970s because of allegations that its gasoline tank could explode if the car was hit from behind. Although breast implants have been around for three decades, they were exempt from thorough testing until 1976, when the FDA began regulating implanted medical devices. It has taken until this year for the agency to get near a decision on whether they should be considered safe and effective.

FDA advisers decided in November that there was not enough scientific evidence to call the implants safe but said they should remain on the market while more studies were done.

OPEC President Urges Large Cut In Oil Output

By Youssef M. Ibrahim
New York Times Service

PARIS — Setting a clear direc-tion for OPEC oil ministers who are scheduled to meet Wednesday in Geneva, the group's president on Sunday called for a significant cut in the cartel's crude petroleum production of 24.2 million barrels a day in order to give sagging prices a boost.

"I think we oced to cut by 1.5 million barrels per day in order to firm up prices, arrest the slide and begin moving toward the $2) a barrel minimum reference price," Jibril Aminu, who is also Nigeria's oil minister, said in Lagos.

The reference price is for an avrege of seven different types of crude pumped by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Currently, the average price of those crudes stands at about $16 a barrel, far below the desired target. [The oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, Youssel Omeir Youssel, indicated Sunday his country was ready to cut output further if other OPEC members went along. news agencies reported.

[Iraq's oil minister, Usama Hiti, called for OPEC to reduce output by 1.5 million barrels a day and said the bulk of the cuts should fall on the Emirates and Saudi Arabia, which be accused of "excessive overproduction."]

Oil Minister Celestino Armas of venezuela said a week ago there was "a growing inclination among OPEC producers to agree to reduce output in order to raise prices."

Sandi Arabia, OPEC's largest producer, with output of 8.5 mil-bon barrels of oil a day, has indi-cated it was willing to reduce its production but has deliberately declined to say by how much, leaving that to what are expected to be difficult negotiations in Geneva when the oil ministers gather on Wednesday.

The recent statements, combined with political pressures within several OPEC countries to boost oil revenues, have left analysts with a general sentiment that the cartel ill take firm action. The recent drop in revenues has caused serious social tensions in countries such as Algeria and Venezuela.

The whole psychology has demand will be higher.

changed," said Gary Ross, president of New York-based Petroleum Re-search Industry Associates, echoing a widespread view in the oil industry that the slide in price that began in November may be balted by

OPEC's actions this week. Expectations of a cut in output have helped oil prices move up $2 a parrel from their recent lows. The average oil price had fallen by more than 20 percent from November to Janaury as OPEC production crept

OPEC officials have said the organizacioo may aim to trim output by anywhere from 5 to 7 percent, with most members leaning toward the higher figure or even more. The 1.5 million-barrel reduction called for by the OPEC president would amount to 6.2 percent. But there is an equally strong appreciation that after two years of steadily pushing their output higher, most OPEC members will have a hard time agreeing on how to reverse course.

The most touted scenarios involve an across the board cut that would exclude Iraq and Kuwait," commented Platt's Oilgram, an industry oewsletter. Iraq has been banned by the United Nations from exporting oil since it invaded Kuwait in August 1990. Last week, it rejected a compromise proposal to resume exports of about 1 million barrels a day. Kuwait, which had a pre-invasion output capacity of 2 million barrels a day, is producing around 600,000 barrels a day oow, including 500,000 for export. It has made it clear that it cannot be expected to slow down the recovery of its oil industry. Saudi Arabia, while signaling last month some willingness to reduce its ouput, has been adamant that it must retain its current 35 percent share of OPEC's output under any oew production ceiling.

The Saudis dispute the generally bearish views about demand for OPEC oil in the second quarter, suggesting they may opt for the smallest cut of 5 percent. Although OPEC and the International Energy Agency in Paris have estimated world will occi only 22.7 milboo barrels of OPEC's crude a day starting in March, the Saudis say

EC Budget Battle Holds Key to Treaty Ambitions

1997, to be presented in Strasbourg on Wednesday by the EC Commission to the European Parliament.
The overall spending ceiling is expected to rise from 66 billion

European currency units this year to around 85 billion Ecus in 1997, representing an increase from 1.2 percent of the Community's gross national product to between 1.35 percent and 1.4 percent.

The major combat, officials said. would pit the poorest members' demands for much more Community aid against the wealthier nations reluctance to shell out more in the midst of an economic downturn.

"What we're looking for is that the promises made in Maastricht to help the less prosperous parts of the Community will now be under-pinned by concrete operational commitments," said a diplomat from Ireland, reflecting a position shared by Spain, Portugal and Greece as members of the Community's so-called Poor Four.

World Bank Arm Sees Opportunities in India

NEW DELHI — The International Finance Corp., the World Bank's investment arm, will step up investment in India to take advantage of the government's sweeping program of economic change, Executive Vice President William Ryrie said.

"Liberal policies of the government are creating a situation encouraging greater IFC participation in India," he said on Saturday.

India will become the largest exposure in the IFC's portfolio in the oext two years, he said. Currently, it ranks second behind Mexico, with $1 billion in 1FC money invested in 60 private companies. The IFC will invest in financial services because a healthy financial sector supports a growing private sector, Mr. Ryrie said. The agency plans to assist Indian companies in raising capital by underwriting their securities issues, and to belp joint ventures between Indian and foreign companies involving direct foreign investment, he said.

The corporation also would like to step up its equity in Indian companies, compared with its loan exposure, he said.

Mr. Ryrie said policies instituted by India in recent months — including scrapping requirements for companies to obtain government licenses to do business and allowing foreign concerns to take majority stakes in Indian companies — were allowing market forces to work.

"I have more hope in the Indian economy than I ever had before," he said. "It has great potential."

PARIS - International bank lending was stuck in the doldrums in the third quarter last year, the Bank for International Settlements said in its regular quarterly survey of activity.

The report, made available ahead of its release on Monday, estimated that net international bank credit expanded by $20 billion - business remained very low, compared with the average $102 bringing the cumulative decline for the first nine months to 6 But even growth in lending to nonbank entities in the industrialized countries slowed sharply, to $11.6 billion, down from $39.4 billion in the previous quarter and the smallest increase since 1985.

Central bank deposits were estimated to total 30 billion Ecus and

Investors Chary of Politicians

Fear of Stimulus Spurs a Perverse Fall in Bond Prices

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK - The perversity that sometimes grips the Treasury securities market was amply demonstrated last week.

Most of the week's action came Friday, when traders learned that the economy lost 91,000 jobs in January, Short-term Treasuries rallied, as they should have, and ended the week sharply higher. But long-term bonds ended the day even, and the week a little lower.

Why? Typically, bonds rally on news of economic contraction because that suggests interest rates and inflation are heading lower. But the bonds' move Friday suggests investors may be fretting more about what the politicians will do to juice up the economy than what the Federal Reserve Board might do to interest rates, traders and analysts said.

deficit of $399.4 billion, the markets are not in the mood for that. When the Labor Department reported January's job losses on Fri-day morning, the benchmark 30-year bond did go up initially, rising as much as 11/4 points. The two-year note traded up about 10/32.

(Continued from first finance page) from a U.S. bank since 1989. Banks increased within hours of the lannch to 200 million DM thanks to its coupon of 10 percent - more than 2 percentage points more than investors can earn buying German government bonds.

The dollar market was quiet awaiting Friday's employment report. Bot bankers, convinced that the Fed will ease, said they expected a beavy flow of issues in coming

Of special interest last week was the appearance of BankAmerica Corp. in the floating-rate note sec-tor. The parent holding company of the West Coast bank offered $200 million of five-year ootes carrying a coupon of 0.375-point over the three-month London interbank offered rate, currently 4 percent. The notes were offered at a discount to yield investors a return of one-half point over Libor.

Security Pacific Corp., which is planning to merge with Bank of America, withdrew a scheduled offering of $100 million notes in the U.S. market after confusion about whether a legislative ruling in Washington state would threaten the merger, But Juan Costain of Kidder, Peabody & Co. in London said he was "optimistic there will be no impact" on BankAmerica's projected a 1992 fiscal year budget

After the Fed drained monetary reserves from the U.S. banking system during the usual intervention period, instead of adding funds as many expected, prices plunged. The 30-year bond declined about 1% before finishing unchanged on the day to yield 7.77 percent. That was just a little below the bond's

The weaker the employment re-withdrew from the market when they were able to raise variable-rate funds more cheaply using the swap market and then subsequently virtually lost access to the public markets as rising bad debts reduced their credit standing.

The dollar floating-rate note market peaked in 1985, when new issues amounted to nearly $47 billion. By contrast, issuance last year totaled only $3.7 billion. There is considerable doubt that this sector of the market can ever recover its former glory.

For openers, the Bank of America is in the vanguard of financial institutions recovering from the credit excesses of the past two decades and thus one of the few that can get access to the public market. More important, the capital-adequacy rules coming into force this year will seriously dent the appetite banks have had for paper issued by other banks, which have been the major issuers of floating-rate notes. Under the new rules, senior debt of banks carries a 20 percent capital-risk weighting. Senior debt of bank holding companies, such as last week's BankAmerica issue, carries a 100-percent risk weighting meaning a 8 percent of the amount of the loan has to be set aside in port, the more likely we'll have fis-cal stimulus," said William Pike, week, which it had closed at a yield of 7.76 percent. "The Fed's failure to ease policy should have been supportive to bonds because it suggests they are going to move slowly and remain concerned about inflation," said William V. Sullivan, Jr., senior vice president at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., reinforcing the impression of market perversity. The two-year note ended Friday up about 1/4 to yield 4.94 percent, for a spread of 283 basis points between it and the 30-year bond, a record. That was well off the note's yield a week previously, when it stood at 5.12 percent. The Fed's rate inaction hurt long-term debt more than shortterm paper for several reasons. Short-term debt had acted recently as though investors were sure the Fed was finished easing credit this year, said David Resler, chief economist at Nomura Securities, who said he thought the Fed would cut interest rates again within a month.

To the extent the Fed drags its feet, Washington's politicians will feel ever more compelled to do something to rescue the economy and keep their seats this election year, Mr. Pike said.

Thus, once prices rallied Friday morning, investors took that as a green light to sell, he said.

That selling and the Fed's failure to ease credit convinced government securities dealers that debt prices were too high considering the Treasury's plan to sell $36 bilhion in short-term and long-term debt oext week. (Bloomberg, NYT)

A Surprise for Fed The Fed's policymakers have been surprised by their success in pushing inflation lower, minotes of a Federal Open Market Committee meeting of Dec. 17 said, according to a Bloomberg Business News report from Washington. The minotes of the meeting, released on Friday, said that "statisti-cal and anecdotal evidence pointed to faster progress toward price stability than they had anticipated earlier." They said that business and consumer confidence were far more negative than economic conditions would warrant. They said this sentiment probably related to consumer concerns about unemployment, heavy debt burdens, and weakness or outrigh failure at many companies and fi-

Polls indicated the two main political parties are running neckand-neck ahead of a general election expected on April 9, while hopes for a pre-election interest rate cut were dashed when the above-inflation pay settlement won by German steel workers ruled out a quick relaxation of Bundesbank monetary policy.

Milan

Prices were modestly higher in light trading. The MIB index rose 1.22 percent, to 1,079 points, as volume increased to an average 35 million shares a day from 32 million the week before.

Banco Ambrosiano jumped by 8.58 percent on the week in reaction to rumors of a possible in-crease of its stake in Credit Agricole, the French bank.

Paris

The Bourse lost a little ground on the week in quiet trading. The CAC-40 index ended the week at 1.861.61 points, off 0.75 percent.

Analysts said that for the fifth Ollars from 1.93 billion dollars. time in almost a year, the Bourse The market was closed from was testing resistance at 1.850,

Singapore
Prices were mixed in trading slowed by the Chinese New Year. The Straits Times industrial index fell 3.40 points on the week, to 1,526.29, but the SES all-Singapore index gained 0.12 points, to 413.33. Turnover for the week fell about percent from the previous week 114.24 million shares valued at 321.16 million dollars.

Tokyo

Prices were mixed, with the Nikkei Stock average gaining 84.07 yen, or 0.38 percent, to 22,107.12 yen, and the Tokyo Stock Price Index declining 3.52 points from a week earlier, to 1,627.42 points. The Nikkei had risen 950.90 yen and TOPIX 46.48 points the previ-

Zurich

Zurich stocks made progress, as the Swiss Performance Index ended at 1,120.24, up 8.75 points, or 0.78 percent.

Analysis said gains were held down by concern about Swiss inflauon, still around 5 percent a year, and about the upward tendency of the country's unemployment rate.

Investors neglected secondary issues and concentrated on blue chips, especially bank stocks. Credit Suisse was up by 4.19 percent to 1.985.

Nestlė rose 1.32 percent to 3,280.

Mongolia Inaugurates

ULAN BATOR, Mongolia Mongolia has opened its first stock exchange as part of an ambitious privatization plan to bring the country closer to Asia's free-market economies.

Brokers from 29 companies par-ticipated in the first trading session on Friday, in which 16,000 shares in three companies were offered in exchange for privatization vouchers.

Zolzhargao, chairman of the stock exchange in the capital of Ulan Bator, said he planned to introduce about five companies to the market a week, depending on public reaction to trading.

Foreign investors will be able to buy shares after the opening of a secondary market - possibly later this year — that will sell stock for money rather than vouchers. Foreigners will be restricted to owning 49 percent of any company.

Under the privatization progra vouchers worth 10,000 tugriks ($250) were distributed to the country's 2.1 million people. The vouchers can be used to buy shares in the 340 large and medium-sized companies due to be floated on the stock market, or to bid for ownership of almost 3,000 small enterprises.

During the 75-minute opening session, vouchers worth 3.16 million tugriks were exchanged for shares in the one large concern, the Ulan Bator Hotel, and two medi-

The hotel rose from an opening of 100 tugriks to 250 tugriks for each of the 10,000 shares offered. All of the hotel's 370,249 shares will be released in coming weeks.

Courier Leaps Past Edberg Into No. 1 Spot

The Associated Press SAN FRANCISCO — AIter a week of acting as if flirt-ing with No. 1 was no big thing, Jim Courier was clearly overwhelmed by the ranking when he finally got it.

Courier fell to his knees and grabbed his head after becoming the first American to reach No. 1 since John McEnroe on Aug. 26, 1985. He earned that inction by defeating Derrick Rostagno oo Saturday to advance to the finals of the Volvo tournament here.

"I was so close, but you never know what is going to hap-pen," said Courier. "I could have never gotten there. I may only be there for one week, but I can always look back and say I was No. 1. They can never take it away from me."

By reaching the finals, Cou-rier earned enough computer points to surpass Stefan Edberg. Courier officially will become No. i when the new rankings come out Monday. Courier, 21, won the French Open last year and the Australian Open two weeks ago, and was a finalist in the U.S. Open in September, which carried him to the No. 2 ranking.

Duke and Oklahoma State Rebound from Defeats

The Associated Press Top-ranked Duke and No. 2 Oklahoma State didn't take long to bounce back from their first losses of the season.

Three days after those defeats, the Blue Devils and Cowboys came back with im-pressive victories Saturday over ranked

Duke's Christian Laeuner and Louisiana State's Shaquille O'Neal battled to a draw in a showdown of the nation's best big men, but it was Grant Hill who helped Duke past No. 22 LSU, 77-67, in Baton Rouge. In Stillwater, Oklahoma State extended its home with a foul plagued 64-56 victory over third-ranked Kansas. Sean Sutton scored seven straight points late in the game to seal the victory for Oklahoma State, which lost to Nebraska on Wednesday.

The 6-foot-11 (2.10-meter) Laettner had 22 points and 10 rebounds, while O'Neal, 7-foot-1, had 25 points and 12 rebounds. But Hill, subbing at point guard for injured the Bobby Hurley, had 16 points, nine rebounds and six assists as the Blue Devils (18-1) bounced back from a loss to North Carolina.

Hill, who usually starts at forward, switched positions after Hurley broke his foot against North Carolina. Hurley is expected to be out for three weeks.

"I was awfully proud of Grant," Laettner said. "He was under a lot of pressure, and he handled that and he

Oklahoma State (21-1) and Kansas (17-2) are now fied for the Big Eight lead at 5-1.

Jamaai Brown added 14 points for the Connecticut, whose second-life Connecticut, whose second-life Scott Burrell, was held to 3.

49-32 lead with 11:34 remaining. But Kan-sas, which had won all seven of its road games this season, rallied to cut it to 54-48 with 4:45 left before Sutton's surge helped put the game away.

Sutton bad with 16 points, while Rex Walters led Kansas with 18.
No. 4 UCLA 82, Washington St. 61: Tra-

Murray scored 20 points and Don Mac-Lean added 19 points and 10 rebounds as UCLA beat Washington State for the 33d straight time in Los Angeles to remain tied with Southern Cal for the Pac-10 lead.

Washington State (16-6, 4-5) fell behind, 24-10, midway through the first half and got no closer than 7 the rest of the way.

UCLA (17-1, 8-1) is off to its best start since 1973-74, when it went 18-1 before losing its second game.

Memphis St. 92, No. 5 Arkansas 88: Anthony Douglas bad 24 points and nine rebounds as Memphis State handed visiting Arkansas its second straight loss.

Arkansas trailed by 90-88 after Memphis State's David Vaughn connected on one of two free throws with 13 seconds left. Lee Mayberry of Arkansas missed a 16footer with eight seconds remaining, and Anfernee Hardaway held the rebound until be spotted Vaughn, who was wide-open for a dunk as time expired.

Vaughn and Billy Smith had 23 points apiece for Memphis State (13-6). Todd Day led Arkansas (17-5) with 20. No. 8 Ohio St. 71, Purine 59: Jim Jack-soo scored 23 points and Ohio State used spurts in each half for its 30th consecutive home victory.

Ten's second-leading scorer with a 21point average, to eight points on 3-of-13 floor shooting. Ohio State improved to 163 overall and 3-1 in the Big Ten. Travis Trice scored a career-high 21 points for Purdue (12-9, 4-5).

No. 11 Michigan St. 79, Wisconsin 64:
Mike Peplowski muscled inside for 19 points and career-high 16 rebounds, and Michigan State used a late first-half spurt to win on the road.
The Spartans (15-4 overall, 5-4 Big Ten) missed shot and hit a 16-foot jumper with 1.3 seconds left as North Carolina overcame a 22-point deficit.

The Tar Heels (17-3, 7-2) beat the visiting Demon Deacons (12-7, 4-6) for the 10th straight time. Hubert Davis led North Carolina's second-half charge, scoring 23 of his career-high 30 points. He was 7-of-10 from the field and hit all seven of his free throws.

Seton Hall 81, No. 10 Connecticut 69: Terry Dehere scored 24 points and Jerry Walker added 22 as Setoo Hall handed the Huskies their third consecutive Big East loss and their first defeat at bome in nearly the Pirates (13-6, 5-5). The loss was the first at Gampel Pavilion for the Huskies (16-4, 7-4) since they were beaten 60-59 by North Carolina State last Feb. 16. Connecticut came into the game after road losses to St. John's and Syracuse.

Seton Hall scored the last 12 points of the first half and led by as many as 19 in the second. Chris Smith had 23 points for Connecticut, whose second-leading scorer, play of Peplowski and Shawn Respert. Wis-consin, led by 24 points from Tracy Webster, fell to 11-11 and 2-7.

Respert scored seven points as the Spar-tans went on a 21-5 surge over the final seven minutes of the first half to take a 47-28 lead at the break. No. 14 Tulane 97, Virginia Con wealth 80: Anthony Reed scored 14 of his 16 points in the second half as Tulane (18-2, 6-0) pulled away from visiting Virginia Commonwealth to stay on top in the Metro Conference.

Tulane's reserve center. Makeba Perry. got 13 points in the first half, which ended at 41-all. He finished with a season-high 17 points and career-high 10 rebounds. Ron Ladd led VCU with 17 points, making five 3-pointers. No. 16 Southern Cal 59, Washington 56: year. Rodney Charman's free throw with 45 secadded two more points with 18seconds remaining as USC got past visiting Washington for its eighth straight victory.

Washington's Chandler Naira made a lay-up with 1:23 left to tie the game at 56.

Chatman was fouled by James French in the act of shooting after getting an offen-sive rebound and made a free throw to put USC (16-3, 8-1) ahead for good.

Stars & Stripes Is No Match For America3

The Associated Press SAN DIEGO — Dennis Conner's "new and improved" Stars & Stripes was no match for Bill Koch's new yacht, America3, in the second round of the America's Cup defender selection series.

America3 in only its third day on the water, downed Stars & Stripes by a commanding 6 minutes, 23 seconds, completing the eight-leg, 22.6-mile (36.7 kilometer) course in 3 hours, 34 minutes, 20 seconds.

During the two-week layover between rounds. Conner acquired seven new sails, moved the rudder and modified the keel in an attempt to improve boat speed. Kocb, president of the America3 Foundation, simply added a third boat to his stable to take a five-point lead over Conner in the defender trials. Though it was America3's first victory, it now has eight points. Because boats are assigned to slots for scoring purposes, points go to the slots, not the boats. Thus, America3, which replaced Defiant in slot B, began the second round with the six points Defiant earned in round one.

In the process of developing the story, however, it seems that we skipped an impor-tant piece of the sex-and-sports puzzle; women. Not so much the lack of women in big-time pm sports, but rather the relation-ship between male athletes and women, and women's role in male-dominated sports.

Krabbe Denies Charges of Doping

KARLSRUHE, Germany (Reuters) — World sprint champion Katrin Krabbe proclaimed her innocence on Sunday in a dope-testing controversy that threatens her career and those of two other top German runners. Krabbe, suspended on Friday with her compatnots Grit Brener and Silke Möller after three urine samples were analyed as coming from the same person, ran in the German indoor championships on Sunday after the ban was lifted.

Cedric Ceballos of the Suns found the trick to win the NBA All-Star Game slam-dunk contest: a blindfold. He scored a perfect 50.

"We are all certain, because we know that we are innocent, that someone or other must have tampered with the sample," Krabbe said after-winning the 60 meter-sprint in 7.11 seconds. The German Athletic Federation ordered an investigation after a world drug expert said on Sunday that the samples had been tampered with. They lifted their suspension pending an investigation, allowing them to compete Sunday.

Dr. Manfred Donike, the expert who ran a second analysis of the uring Costs to determination samples, said, "All three wine samples came from the same person; I cannot say from whom."

Tests on East Bloc Athletes Cited

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists in East Germany, the Soviet Union and other former East bloc countries experimented on athletes with hormones, steroids and genetic testing in an effort to further their state-run sports programs, a U.S. magazine has reported.

The magazine, U.S. News & World Report, said in its Feb. 17 issue that youngsters were removed from their parents at an early age and put in schools where they were given drugs to enhance their sports performance. The report said scientists in the former East Germany experimented on athletes with hormones that affect the brain, trying to combat unwanted side effects of steroids. Beginning in 1975, researchers administered a variety of neural hormones to athletes in such events as gymnastics, judo and fencing.

Documents found by a German molecular biologist, Werner Franke, show that East German researchers treated athletes almost like lab snimals, the magazine said. Some East German women, the documents say, were given steroid doses twice as large as those taken by the Canadian sprinter Ben Johnson.

Henkel, 27, the 1991 world outdoor champion, broke the mark of 2.057 set by Sterka Kostadinova of Bulgaria on Feb. 27, 1988. Mark Everett, after coming close last year, broke Martin McGrady's 22-year-old record in the indoor 600-yard race in the Militose Games at Madison Square Garden. Everett broke McGrady's record of 1 minute, 07.6 seconds on Friday with a time of 1:07.53. Last year, he clocked 1:07.91.

Koreas Agree to Hold Sports Talks

SEOUL (Reuters) - North and South Korea have agreed to resume sports talks that were abandoned after a northern athlete defected to the south in August, South Korea's state radio reported Sunday. Korea Broadcasting System said that the South Korean sports minister, Lee Jin Sam, met the chairman of the North Korean Olympic Committee, Kim Yoo Soon in Albertville, France. Both men were attending the opening of the Winter Olympics on Saturday. Lee and Kim agreed to resume talks to pave the way for unified Korean reams to be sent to all international sporting events, KBS said. The two agreed to meet again after a sixth round of inter-Korean prime ministerial talks to be held in Pyongyang beginning Feb. 18, the radio said. It did not say where they would meet.

Veteran Vettori Soars To First Major Title

COURCHEVEL, France - Ernst Vettori, an Austrian veteran who had never won a major title, held off the new generation of Olympic ski jumpers and won the 90-meter gold medal Sunday.

Britain — BBC1: 1165-36, 1550, 2300-2400; BBC2: 186-38, 2335. Vettori, 27, collected 222.8 points for the two jumps to beat his 17-year-old compatriot, Martin Höllwarth, who took the silver with 218.1 points.

TV1: 1045-13841 Tom Nieminen, the 16-year-old Finn who has dominated the World Cup season, had to settle for the bronze medal with 217 points and missed the opportunity to become the youngest male champion in the history of the Winter Olympics.

By Christine Brennan Washington Past Service

ALBERTVILLE, France - The women's 3,000-meter speed skating race at the Olympic Oval on Sun-day was a long and arduous event, but when it ended, giving the united German team its first gold medal at the 1992 Winter Olympics, it turned into a forum for American Mary Docter to vent her anger con-cerning media reports of her admitted drug use.

Two former East Germans. Gunda Niemann and Heike Warnicke, were not to be outdone Sunday. Niemann, 25, holds the world record in this race in 4:10.80 and easily outdistanced the field. Warnicke was second in 4:22.88. Anstria's Emese Hunyady won the bronze medal in 4:24.64.

Yvonne Van Gennip of the Netherlands, the triple gold medalist at the 1988 Winter Games, fin-

Although coaches and skaters had speculated before the race that later starts would be favored by better ice conditions, Warnicke and Hunyady were the first pair of skaters to race. "This is utmost happiness for me. Tears just well up into my eyes," Niemann said. "This is already a dream fulfilled." In the 1988 Olympics in Calgary, Nicmann was seventh in the 1,500

"I think this was a race very good for the image of skiing," he said. "It was technically extremely difficult and I think in my mind it's the fumre of Alpine." The 1972 Swiss Olympic gold medalist Bernhard Russi was called in to design a new route for these Games, and has been vigorously defending it against charges it was too slow, with too many curves, ever since it was finished last year. Skiers said the hardest element to handle was a long, roundabout turn halfway down that cut their speed to 20 mph (32 kph) — crawl-ing to daredevils accustomed to schussing along at up to 70 mph. Ortlieb's medal run took many by surprise. He was the first racer

Ortlieb had reason to worry until then. Earlier this season, a fine run as Garmisch-Partenkirchen in Germany had Ortlieb coovinced his first World Cup victory was in hand till Markus Wasmeier of Germany popped out of the 38th start position to snatch his victory away.

While Ortlieb's triumph was impressive, the glory went mostly to Piccard, who rallied from poor performances early this year to dazzle his countrymen Sunday.

Piccard, who took Olympic gold and bronze in the 1988 Super G and downhill at Calgary, Alberta, has struggled since. It got so bad at Garmisch-Partenkirchen this year that he took some time off after finishing 70th, seven seconds off the pace in the downhill.

"I had no eagerness to ski," he said. "I just wanted to go home alone, to take a breath, so I did. I took a rest, enjoyed family life and okay, that settled me and I was ready to go back again."

Funeral Foppery and the Art of Death

International Flerald Tribute ONDON - Our emphasis on bealth and enduring youth is just another way of putting off the dire and capricious inevitable: death. Even at the Victoria and Albert museum's current exhibition, "The Art of Death," on visual aspects of the death ritual from 1500 to 1800.

MARY BLUME

visitors seem uneasy, partly because it is a weak show for so great a subject, partly because the subject itself automatically makes one wish one were elsewhere.

The exhibition begins roughly with the Reformation and ends with the Gordoo riots against popery, by which time there were only 78,000 registered Catholics left in the land. Elaborate and sometimes joyous Victorian death rituals are thus eliminated and, more important, there is no sense of the awful pain everyone must have felt during the liturgical lurchings of the Reformation (between 1549 and 1559 England adopted and rejected four different prayerbooks), when even the simple act of burying one's dead and praying for their souls was so often and so bewilderingly transformed.

"The Art of Death," organized by Nigel Llewellyn, an art historian at the University of Sussex, was to have been held a year ago but was canceled for fear that the Gulf War might bring the subject too close for comfort. Among the objects on show is the Tor Abbey Jewel, a memento mori, dated about 1546, from the museum's own collection; a sumptuous enameled coffin-shaped pendant whose lid lifts to reveal a skeleton. The jewel was intended to be worn on a gold chain around the neck and on its top the words are carved, "Through the Resurrection of Christe we be all sanctified."

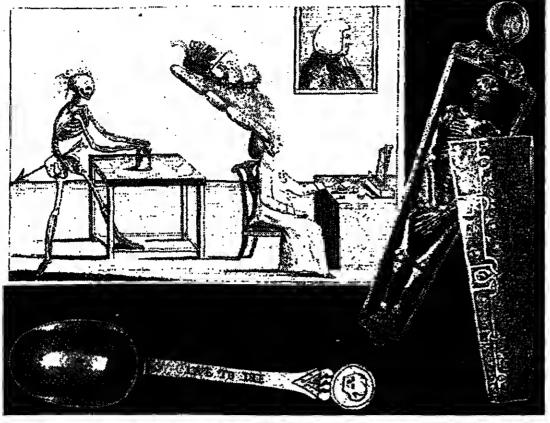

Death being always present, one of the basic parts of the ritual, Llewellyn says, was to teach the living how to die through visual representations of the good death and the

The good man, as the bour approaches, looks serene; the bad man tremhles as the Grim Reaper nears. Crimi-nals' deaths were automatically bad, those of children and valiant soldiers good.

By the mid-18th century, when theological turmoil had abated, Thomas Rowlandsoo considered bad deaths in his drawings on the subject to be those that were merely unfortunate; death on a desert island with a bird picking at the bones, or death in a riding accident with a maddened steed dragging a bloodied rider whose foot had got caught in his stirrup.

An exemplary and artistically elevered death was that, in May, 1633, of Lady Venetia Digby, a good woman much loved by her busband, who asked Van Dyck to do ber deathbed portrait. This was not greatly difficult as he had painted ber days before her sudden demise, although it is said that be had to pinch her waxen cheeks to restore a bit of color.

Liewellyn's view is that the English death ritual was divided into two parts: the natural, or biological, body and the social body, which represented the deceased's place in society. The natural body, at least among the wealthy, was treated to embalming and the making of death masks, the social body to funeral rites that exalted the corpse and, by extension, its mourners.

In "The Art of Death" at the Victoria and Albert Museum, the Tor Abbey Jewel and a mourning spoon.

mercial undertakers came in to break their monopoly in the late 17th century. The exhibition may fail in terms of demonstrating liturgical and social changes after the Reformation but it is a stunning example of the familiar historical connection between Protestantism and the rise of capitalism. With the arrival of the undertaker, a whole new industry was born - printed funeral invitations. increasingly elaborate coffins, mass-produced funeral souvenirs and, finally, in the mid-19th century, private

The elimination of the Catholic ootion of purgatory, the waiting place, ended the belief that the dead were still close by. The funeral sermon, as a means of offering examples and giving hope, became more important and it may be added that the words written on death in the 17th century are a good deal more interesting than funeral souvenirs or coffin styles. The reflections of, say, John Donne or Sir Thomas Browne may have no place, strictly speaking, in a show on the visual arts but there is oot even a picture of Donne's statue which he commissioned a few years before his death and kept beside him as a memento mori. A printed copy of Gray's Elegy is included in the show, but a study of the English art of death without mention of its greatest commentators is like an exhibition of paintings shown only through brushes and palettes.

If English funerals came to lack the voluptuous grief,

The ceremonies, strictly regulated, were organized for those of high rank by the College of Heralds until comthe nation's pastoral beauty with their churchyards and simple graven headstones. From the earliest period there was a distinct search for simplicity, and sumptuary laws were applied oot only to mourning dress but to the materials used in shrouds.

> Still, as time went on the number of funerary artefacts became more varied - rings, fans, black-edged gloves, a handsome silver spoon bearing e motto rather like a 20th century biker's jacket, Live to Die. By the late 18th century funeral foppery had become a subject of satire.

Llewellyn has written a book to accompany the exhibition filled with fashionable references to Sanssure and Levi-Strauss. Death he qualifies as a rite of passage though few have called it so. Our own culture, he says, occds to understand the need for ritual complexity and acknowledgment of bereavement. To accompany its oegative connotations the rimal of death has become ever more muted, its signals ever more bland," he writes.

The Victoria and Albert is doing its best to revitalize the subject. The exhibition, which continues to March 22, also offers one-day courses on such subjects as Counselling the Bereaved, and Death and Popular Culture. A session on funeral food, presumably with samples, has been held, and a demonstration of the Art of the Death Mask was given on Jan. 18, with a break of 30 minutes in the proceedings while the plaster dried.

From the Jaws of Triumphalism

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — "Triumph Without Victory" is the title of a new U. S. News & World Report book about the Gulf War. A nice differentiation of synonyms: in current usage, o triumph is a speciacular win, as of a single battle, victory - rooted in the Latin vincere, "to conquer" - often has the connotation of the successful culmination of a war.

Back in the days of the Cold War (no, I'm not being oostalgic), the word victory was frowned on in accommodationist circles. General Douglas MacArthur's stern 1951 statement to a joint meeting of Congress, "In war there is no substitute for victory," seemed unduly final to many seeking a settlement of the Korean conflict; a decade later, Senator Barry M. Goldwater used the word to provoke his liberal critics in the title of his book "Why Not Victory?"

Meanwhile, perhaps to conceal ambitions of global domination, Soviet propagandists put forward the notion of convergence, a meeting of the Communist and capitalist systems on some undefined common ground; the notion of winning the Cold War was considered bellicose and not in the spirit of detente. Caspar W. Weinberger, defense secretary for Ronald Reagan, was criticized for using the verb prevail in predicting the outcome of a ouclear war, but could have pointed to William Faulkner's use of the term about mankind in a Nobel Prize lecture.

Then Eastern Europe spun off from the Soviet em-pire, and the Soviet Union itself began to come apart; after the Communist Party was banned in Russia, it became apparent that the West had actually won the ideological struggle with the bipolar bear. But when some unreconstructed hard-liners wanted to run out in the streets to celebrate, reconstructed soft-liners pointed to the impropriety of gloating, as in the words of Rear Admiral John Woodward (Jack) Philip at the battle of Santiago in 1898: "Don't cheer, men, those poor devils are dying." A word was needed to attack the exultant winners for their offensive desire to celebrate.

The word was waiting, having been coined in 1964 in a nonpolitical, religious context. In a book on the Vatican Council, "Observer in Rome," Robert Mo-Afee Brown wrote, "I am greath impressed by the recognition of the 'triumphalism' that has often seemed to characterize the church." The use of quotation marks may have been the act of a self-conscious coiner, or more likely the author's use of a neologism in the Roman air at that time. The context shows it was an attack word on those confident of the rightness of their faith, which critics saw to be the proud and rigid certitude of religious authority.

In 1968, Wayne H. Cowan, managing editor of a liberal Protestant journal, was quoted in The New York Times as saying that a pastoral letter "mutes the triumphatism of the past." The word, perhaps a suitable suphemism for "arrogance" or at least "haughtiness," was too useful to be limited to any one field. In The New Yorker in 1975, Tad Szule called the contrast between wealth and poverty in Brazil under President Ernesto Geisel "understandable, given what critics of the regime have labeled 'triumphalism' - something that goes way beyond mere ostentation on a colossal scale

Most dictionaries up-to-date enough to include the word are still defining it in religious terms: "the doctrine or belief that the teachings of a particular faith are eternal and indestructible" is the definition in the Third Barnhart Dictionary of New English, adding correctly that the term is "usually used in a pejorative way." Architecture took a whack at it: "In architecture interior decoration," wrote The Economist in 1977 about Spain, "the shoddy 'triumphalism' of the 1950s has given way." But the temporal has now overtaken the spiritual and architectural; in London, The Observer wrote in 1983 that certain conservative journalists "fed readers and viewers a diet of triumphalistic pap." The same year, Fidel Castro warned that "an air of triump reigns in the Reagan administration," an attitude that he equated with adventurism. Attending a 1991 conference headed by Graham T. Allison Jr. of Harvard, who was then working on a "grand bargain" to ease Soviet transition to a freer economy, Edward Mortimer of the Financial Times wrote, "The high point for me came when a text I had drafted on 'America's role in the new international order' was criticized, by an American, for its 'excessive Victory, which John F. Kennedy said had a thousand fathers, is sweet, but its headiness can lead to unsteadiness, I recall the cuphoria after the 1972 Nixon election; when some of my horly partisan colleagues rubbed their hands in anticipation of a grand sweeping-out of losers, the speech writer Raymond K. Price cautioned, "There is the 'sore winner'

Winners — especially of landslide victories or ideo-logical conflicts — do well to remember the words of Mark Antony when viewing the body of Julius Caesar.
"Dost thou he so low? / Are all thy conquests glories, triumphs, spoils, / Shrunk to this little measure?"
There are always those spoilsports around, loaded. down with sour looks and wet blankets, and they now have a hefty verbal javelin to hurl at the celebrants at the victory party: triumphalist.

FDR rejected what he called "iffy questions"; he saw them as reportural traps. President Bush, too. dismisses The thetical questions; asked about extending unemployment benefits if the ecounty sides again, he replied, "If a frog had wings, he wouldn't his his tail on the ground." This vivid construction was cited in the 1942 Dictionary of Quotations by H. L. Mencken as "If a frog had. wings, he wouldn't bump his backside every time he jumps." It was an American variant of the English "If my aunt had been a man, she'd have been my uncle" and the German "If my aunt had wheels, she would be

In this tall-talking construction, the subordinate or "iffy" clause is called the protasts, from the Greek for "premise of a syllogism"; the main clause is the apodosis, from the Greek verb for "to deliver." Together, they form a hypothetical situation that has been described as suppository, which strikes me as a poor choice of a word, Fred Cassidy at the Dictionary of the counterfactual American Regional English calls it a counterfactual trope; I call it the comic conditional.

Don't you wish you could coin one? (As they said in the 17th century, "If wishes were horses, beggars, would ride.")
